

COPYRIGHT POLICY

The Canadian Association for the Study of the Liver (CASL) controls the “right to copy” for all information we develop or publish in any format, including in print and on this website. CASL also holds copyright for material published under our logo in our peer-reviewed Canadian Liver Journal. Any materials published by CASL, whether in print or online, may not be reproduced, broadcast or distributed without prior permission.

We welcome requests for permission to reproduce CASL material for the purposes of education and advocacy and, in most cases, require only two things:

1. A written request detailing what materials are to be used, by whom, and how widely they will be disseminated;
  - a) Requests for permission to reproduce materials published in the Canadian Liver Journal should be addressed to our publishers using the information provided on this page: <https://canlivj.utpjournals.press/about/permissions>
2. CASL must be clearly credited as the source of the information, once disseminated. We will provide the appropriate “credit line” once a request is granted.

While linking to our website is encouraged and welcome, CASL usually does not allow our content to reside on other websites. Exceptions are occasionally made for educational purposes, and are decided on a case-by-case basis.

We also reserve the right to withhold or to charge for permission to copy our material based on our assessment of each request. Every request is assessed on its own merit and may require contacting the party making the request for clarification or follow-up.

CASL strives to comply fully with copyright practice when developing our own material by seeking permissions where appropriate, referencing our information, and acknowledging the contributions of allied organizations and others to our work.

Use of our logo:

The Canadian Association for the Study of the Liver does not permit the use of its logo in any material (print or digital), without expressed written permission.